GETTING STARTED 2-3: SAVING $ on BOOKS

So, you need to buy a used book for a course your student is going to take. Where are you going to look? Amazon?

Sorry to say, I used to buy everything from amazon, and I still purchase occasionally. However, I found that they supported causes which I could not in good conscience support. So, I started looking around for other sources, especially for sources for used books. I found a ton.

To start your search: Try Ebay. Here individuals as well as businesses sell their wares and used textbooks, etc. Many times I have found a great deal on ebay. Just insert the ISBN – that big number in a rectangular box on the back of the book, or insert the title itself in the search bar and you're off to the races.

If someone on Ebay doesn't have what I want, I just enter it in the Google search bar, or whatever browser I am using, and put "used" after the title. It's amazing how many secondhand booksellers are on the internet. I peruse each one, searching out the best deal.

HINT: WATCH OUT for those persons who put a low price and a HIGH SHIPPING COST. The price of your item is the total cost.

Now, what about buying NEW books? It's much the same.

Google the title and find the best price. If you can't support the company that has the best price, well, find the best deal elsewhere.

We vote with our dollars, people. Want a better world? Make sure you place your dollars where your values and principles are supported.

Good Shopping.
